A small group of 21 American soldiers, however, refused repatriation, and decided to stay in China. The majority of the 21 Americans returned to America, where they recanted their statements and were imprisoned by the military. Others remained in China, got educations, worked in a variety of jobs, married and raised families. In interviews today, several of the surviving men—those who remained in China and those who returned to the U.S—and members of their families,
